

ABOUT THE PHOTOGRAPHER

Casey Currey-Wilson was born and raised in Portland. He grew up loving the outdoors and started taking pictures of Oregon's wilderness before the age of 10, slowly expanding his portfolio to include locations around the western United States and Canada. His passion for photography really took off when he won first prize in Canon's Photography in the Parks competition in 2010, but he never lost sight of his goal of preserving beautiful moments in nature and sharing them with the rest of the world. Recently, he has become an accomplished filmmaker as well, working as a film editor while attending college at UC Berkeley, where he studies film and computer science.

He cordially invites you to experience a photographic journey through the wilderness of the northwest by viewing the rest of his portfolio at
